ABSTRACT

The present article deals with the fisheries development of three important Ox-Bow Lakes of Ballia district of eastern Uttar Pradesh in relation to physico-chemical and biological conditions. The results were found conducive for Fisheries development. The results indicate clearly that potential fish yield is not being realized from the lakes and there is immense scope for increase in Fish production.

KEY WORDS : Ox-Bow lakes, Productivity.

Introduction

The third world countries are facing acute problem of malnutrition owing to exponential acceleration of human population and not so commensurate nutritional food supply. Thus, there arises an immediate need of producing highly nutritive food to save humanity from hunger as well as from nutritional deficiencies. Fish constitutes an excellent source of protein and may be valuable supplement to human diet particularly for rural masses of India. Moreover, in the matter of feed conversion efficiency, no farm animals are comparable to fishes. Besides, it may play an important role in the developing economy of our nation by generating employment avenues as also for various commercial activities.

Eastern Uttar Pradesh is provided with plentiful inland waters in the form of large lakes, reservoirs, low lying areas, ponds, pools and ditches which offer immense scope for fish culture operations to add to the fisheries wealth. All these water bodies were once teeming with fish but due to man made changes in their environment, shrinkage in size due to human encroachment for habitat, input of industrial and domestic sewage effluents, all these water bodies are facing one or the other problem thus adversely affecting the fisheries.

Ballia, the eastern most district of Uttar Pradesh is bordered by the Ganga River in the south and the Ghaghara River in the north and east. The district extends westwards from the confluence point of the Ganga and Ghaghara rivers. The loop and bends formed by meandering courses of rivers in time have resulted in the formation of a number of Ox-bow lakes, depressions and low-lying areas in the district which constitute potent fish resource of this region. Significant among them are Suraha lake, Lake Dah Muriyari and Lake Dah Reoti.

Suraha lake formed by the former channel of Ganga River, is one of the biggest lakes of the country covering an area of 2602.18 hectares of perennial water. During rainy season, it inundates large low-lying areas thus expanding to total area of 3642.25 hectares. The lake is connected with the Ganga River through Katehar Nullah which fills or drains the lake depending upon the water level of the lake in relation to that of the river. Lake Dah Muriyari covering an area of 287.69 hectares and Lake Dah Reoti covering an area of 436 hectares of perennial water are formed by the former channels of river Ghaghara whereas Lake Dah Muriyari gets connected with the river during rainy season. The lake Dah-Reoti rarely gets opportunity to establish continuity with the Ghaghara river. Inflow and outflow of water from all the lakes through connecting nullahs is controlled by flap-control regulators.

Methodology

The authors and the co-authors have made extensive observations on the water quality^{3,9,12} qualitative and quantitative abundance of plankton in time and space^{2,9,10,12} and phytoplankton primary production^{4,10,11} on various lakes of this area. This communication is
